Seventh annual ALCA Private Land Conservation Conference to be held in Canberra, Australia

*Monica Haynes - communications lead, Australian Land Conservation Alliance
August 14, 2023*

The Australian Land Conservation Alliance's seventh annual Private Land Conservation Conference (PLC23: Unite for Nature) will be held on Ngannawal Country at the National Convention Centre in Canberra from October 16-18. The conference brings together the land conservation sector through a shared vision of a healthy and resilient Australia.

Nature's central role as a keystone of wellbeing, food security, and economic and cultural strength is well recognized across Australia. From Parliament to communities, around dinner tables and board tables, at farm and school gates, society is taking note and steps to remedy its declining condition. Together, the land conservation community and its allies are driven by a collective responsibility to reverse nature loss.

The Unite for Nature conference is an unparalleled opportunity for conservation practitioners to come together to support and progress the sector's knowledge and capacity for change. In response to the unfolding nature crisis, this year's conference will highlight the increasingly critical role of private land conservation and showcase innovative collaborations, long-standing partnerships, and visionary thinking that are unlocking financial tools and resources, galvanizing on-the-ground action, and forging networks to catalyze management, protection, and restoration of Country.

To register for the conference please visit the PLC23 Unite for Nature website: <https://www.alcaconference.org.au/>.
